NEWTOWN VICTIMS OF WRECK ARE BURIED

Remains Brought to Their Late Home on Monday—Henry M. Pownall and Two Daughters, Estella T. and Helen M., Died in the Wreck at Manchester.

Four Bucks countians are known to have been killed in the wreck of the G. A. R. excursion train near Geneva, N. Y., on Friday last week—Henry M. Pownall and daughters, Helen and Estella, of Newtown, and A. M. Hunsicker, a prominent resident of Perkasee.

Dr. E. E. Pownall, of Richboro, a nephew, and Wesley Pownall, a son, of Newtown, identified the bodies of Henry M. Pownall and daughters on Saturday and they were brought to Newtown on Monday about noon. Their funerals were held on Tuesday from their late residence, of Washington avenue, The triple funeral was one of the largest ever held in Newtown. Interment was made at Newtown cemetery.

A. M. Hunsicker, of Perkasee, the other victim, was returning from an extended visit with a party of friends in upper New York and Canada. The back of his skull was crushed in. A son-in-law, Harvey Apple, noticed a name in the list of dead which sounded something like Hunsicker and on investigating, as he knew Mr. Hunsicker was to take that train, found it was his father-in-law, who was killed. Undertaker Neill brought the body home on Sunday.

Mr. Pownall was one of the most prominent citizens of Newtown, active in church affairs, G. A. R. circles, and the advancement of the town. His wife is deceased. By occupation he was a harness maker. He had been a resident of Newtown for many years. He, accompanied by Mrs. F. H. Woodward, attended the G. A. R. Encampment, and were returning home.

Harold Serraton, of Howard College, who was with the ill-fated train, arrived in Doylestown, Pa., to visit his mother, Mrs. Lillie Stratton, and recover from his injuries. He was in one of the cars which went over but escaped with a wrenched back and other smaller injuries.

RAINED BULL FROGS.

The rain this week has been the most severe in many years. It has continued for a whole week with few exceptions and there has not been but a few hours either day or night but what rain has fallen.

The record shows, however, for the week took place on Wednesday night, when according to Lewis Edward Willard, of Doylestown, while on Willow Grove it actually rained bull frogs. Lewis Edward is a track walker on the Cut-off railroad and while on Wednesday night carrying a lantern he was caught in the deluge and says he saw a number of them jump about the size of the tip of your little finger, hopping about the rails. He said that they came from the creek or ponds as they were on the part of the railroad a half mile from any such water. He says that the railroad was raised a number of feet from the fields.

He described the rain as falling so fast that it reminded him of snow as it could not be heard through it. Each time after the hard downpour he would see hundreds of little frogs jumping about, and no amount of argument will convince him that they did not come in the rain from the clouds.

WILLOW GROVE NEWS.

CREATORE POPULAR AT WILLOW GROVE PARK.

Has an Excellent Band.

The management of Willow Grove Park could scarcely have made a better selection for the closing of the Park season than Creatore and his band. While a large portion of music lovers prefer orchestra music, yet there are a few who do not enjoy a good band concert, especially when it renders classics in the manner of the Creatore. The numbers now being played at the Willow Grove Park concerts range from the catchy march to the heavy symphony. The programs are pleasing in the extreme and each number is rendered with unusual skill and precision.

One's first impression would be that the Creatore is a leader in the field, but after one or two selections are played one begins to realize that this is a wonderfully artistic organization this really is.

Creatore is truly a skilled musician. He leads in a whole new manner, and loving no one part to fall short, and moving the entire band in perfect unison. His interpretation of such numbers as "The March of the Toys" and "Tannhauser Overture" with their thunderous crescendos and climaxes leads in a whole new manner, and loving no one part to fall short, and moving the entire band in perfect unison.

GEO. R. PAYNE HELD FOR COURT UNDER BAIL

Accused of Manlaughter, Motorist Released on $3000 Bail, Large Damage Suit Pending.

The court room at the Abington township building was crowded to the doors on Tuesday evening, when George R. Payne was committed with bail to Norristown Court by Squire H. C. Williams.

Payne was charged with manslaughter instead of aggravated assault and battery, which was the first charge made against him and was changed on account of Smith's death.

Rubey Vale, Esq., appeared as attorney for Payne and Charles McVoy Assistant Montgomery County District Attorney for the Commonwealth.

Payne is accused of having run down and killed Martin Smith, an employee of Folly Farms on the York road in Abington on August 15. Three witnesses were heard. They were Freeman Kulp, Walter Russell and Mahlon H. Mansell, one of Payne's companions in the motor. The latter said:

"We were at Broad street and Erie avenue at not later than 12:10 a. m. We made no stops between this point and that of the accident, except to get gasoline from a York road garage. Mr. Payne never drove faster than fifteen to eighteen miles an hour; not more than six or seven minutes was consumed in getting the gasoline."

The accident happened at 1:36 a. m., and according to Smith's statement, one hour and one minute must have been consumed to run a car five and one-half miles without a stop.

On Wednesday the Montgomery County Court at Norristown admitted Payne to bail on a bond in the sum of $3000 for his appearance at court, given by J. Walter Zebby, of Moreland township. No testimony was taken at the habeas corpus proceedings other than look up the property of the bondsmen.

REAL ESTATE
NOVELTY AT A MODERATE OUTLAY.

Design 862, by Glenn L. Saxton, Architect, Minneapolis, Minn.

PERSPECTIVE VIEW—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.

Here is presented a plan having a large living room reached by a porch entrance direct. At the center of the room is an open fireplace. At its left a stairway to the second story and an archway opening into a very pleasant den with a Dutch window. At the right is another archway opening into a large dining room. At the back is a small library or sewing room. Through a butler's pantry access to the kitchen is gained. In the second story there are two chambers and a bath. In place of the skylight one could put on a couple of dormers, which would not only furnish light, but would break the monotony of the roof. The first story is finished in Washington fir, the second in pine to paint, with birch floors in both. Size twenty-eight feet wide and thirty-six feet deep over the main part. Cost to build, exclusive of heating and plumbing, $2,400.

By special arrangement with me the editor of this paper will furnish complete plans and specifications of design No. 862 for $20.

STATE POLICE FOR GWYNEDD

Series of Robberies Last Winter Led to Appointment of Detail for Suburbs.

The exclusive Gwynedd section will be made a sub-station for a detail of State constabulary.

During the last winter months, this district (comprising Gwynedd, Gwynedd Valley, Penryn and North Wales) was the centre of operations of a daring band of burglars and housebreakers. Numerous depredations were reported with losses aggregating into the thousands.

It is to prevent any repetition of the conditions of a few months ago that application was made recently for a detail of State constables to patrol the section, and it is now announced that a detail of three men from the Pottsville battalion will be sent to the section, with headquarters near the William Penn Inn, a historic hostelry, at Gwynedd.

How Two Russian Exiles Found Oblivion.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

Copyright, 1911, by American Press Association.

I make this record, which I have sealed, to be opened by my oldest son as soon as his mother and I shall have passed away. I have brought up my children to refrain from the slightest reference to their parents' childhood and youth, telling them that to do so would imperil their very lives. The story of how they as young people passed out of existence will therefore only be read when the narrator has passed away. I shall give no real names. I shall call myself Alexis Olizoff, which is a confession that I am a Russian. My father is a landed proprietor and, though not noble, is a gentleman. When I came to the proper age he sent me to the university, where I became intimate with the most pronounced radicals, and my father, hearing of my affiliations, took me away before I had finished my studies. When I reached home I had a long conference with him respecting my future, and it was decided that I should go to America.

The third summer after my arrival in the new world I spent a vacation at the seashore. While there a favorite lounging place with me was on the rocks directly in front of the hotel. It was a fascinating spot. Beneath the waves kept up an incessant influx and reflux. To the left stretched a broad band of foam composed of hummerlike curves, at the farther end of which the beach was broken by a rocky point. A short distance out from that point a white plume of spray kept bursting into view, fading, coming and fading again with the regularity of a revolving light.

One afternoon I was lying on my back, watching this scene, my hands under my head, one leg thrown over the other, my hat shading my eyes; indeed, my indolence in keeping my surroundings, especially the play of the water and the effortless soaring of the gulls. Hearing a rustle of skirts behind me, I instinctively rose and held my hat in hand, waiting for a young girl who was coming to pass on. To my surprise her face indicated recognition.

"Alexis?"

"Lisa! What brings you here?"

"To this particular spot? You, I saw your name on the hotel register and have been looking for you."

"But what brings you to America?"

"Oh, I read of the independence of the American women and the fields of labor open to them. I couldn't sit and twirl my thumbs waiting for my father to find a husband for me. I preferred to make a career for myself."

"But, Lisa, do you expect to make a career for yourself at a summer resort?"

"No. I have but just arrived in America and have been told that it is now the dull season. I came here to wait for busier times."

Lisa Yasselevna was the daughter of a gentleman whose estate adjoined my father's in Russia. We had been playmates as children, but I had not seen her since my departure for the university. It was natural that the meeting should bring me great pleasure. We walked down to the foot of the rocks, thence to the beach and strolled northward on the sand. Lisa told me many things of home—that my brother had gone into the army; that my sister was engaged to be married; that her father had received an appointment under the government. These bits of news she gave me as we walked side by side.

"Where are you staying?" I asked.

"At the same hotel as you. But I am going to change."

"No! I will change."

"A farmhouse will suit me better. I am without a chaperon, and a hotel is not the best place for me."

I was somewhat surprised that this independence of character which had led her to choose a field of labor should be found side by side with such deference to custom. However, the change of residence was essential and resulted in avoiding criticism, for we were constantly together. Usually in the morning we would sit on the beach looking at the bathers. In the afternoon we would go to the rocks and watch the water pour in and out of the caverns at their base. Occasionally we would take a boat with a single sail, which I could manage quite well, and skim over the ocean. Remembering the restrictions in such matters that Lisa had been used to at home, I apologized for asking her to go out thus alone with me. A curious expression crossed her face as she said: "What have I to do with such absurdities?"

Again the inconsistency of her behavior puzzled me.

Indeed, in all things Lisa was singular. As a child she had been so, and now that she was a woman that seriousness had deepened into what I could not define it. She seemed to have been lifted far above the narrow old world views among which she had been born. And yet she did not seem fitted for the humdrum existence of a working woman.

She certainly was not in a hurry to set to work. If I questioned her as to her plans she would say, "Time enough for that when I have returned to the city." Indeed, I began to suspect that she had had another motive in coming to America—a love affair.

We did not enjoy our meeting as I did and every day grew more and more distant. Besides, it was plain that she was trying to conceal from me the fact that she was troubled. I sounded her up to the cause.

"Lisa," I said, "you have something on your mind."

"What makes you think so?" she asked, starting.

"Well, I have thought that perhaps there is some one in Russia—a nobleman whom you love and who loves you, but whose rank cuts you off from him."

She sighed, but did not affirm or deny my hypothesis. Her actions only confirmed me in it. For it filled the conditions. She would be likely to keep such a case hidden from the world for the sake of her lover, if not for her own.

I returned the sigh, for I had dreaded this very confession. My view of the case was further confirmed by an incident that occurred soon after. We were sailing on the ocean when we were overtaken by a sudden squall. I lowered the sail as quickly as possible, leaving only a small bit of it loose in the air.

The wind struck in from the north and blew us southward along the coast. We were not only in danger of being tossed keel upward, but of striking on sunken rocks. I confessed I was very much frightened. Lisa sat as calmly as if we were swinging in a hammock.

"How brave you are!" I said.

"Brave? Do you call this something to fear? There are troubles far more to be dreaded."

Fortunately the wind lulled as we were passing an inlet, and, holding sail, I soon made smooth water and tied up to a low wooden pier.

"Thank God," I exclaimed as I stepped ashore.

"Why thank God?" said Lisa. "We don't know what to be thankful for. We don't think him when some misfortune befalls us, yet it may be a blessing in disguise."

"Why, Lisa?" I exclaimed, looking at her in surprise.

"Don't mind me," she said, smiling. "Try and remember me as I am now. I am in school, not as I am now."

She said nothing more as we walked away toward our respective homes. Notwithstanding her seeming indifference I looked for some involuntary consciousness that she was relieved at our narrow escape from death in the sea, but if she felt she gave no sign.

"Surely," I said to myself, "this love must have taken a strong hold of her since she doesn't care to have been saved from death."

That she suffered was plain, but how or what she suffered was a mystery. There were times when she did not appear to suffer at all, when some bright ray of hope seemed to break in upon her and lift her out of her despondency into a whirl of merriment. Once when she was in this mood, I said to her:

"I know why you are happy today. You have received news of your lover. All will yet be well."

I watched her closely to observe the effect of my words, but they had no effect, at least none that I could detect. Her gay mood lasted till we parted. Then I saw tears.

"Lisa," I said, "give me your confidence; trust me."

"I cannot even trust myself," she replied and ran away.

There were times when she would show a tenderness for me, which I could only account for on the ground that we were solitary companions in a foreign land. Once when we were walking on the beach by moonlight she felt for my hand and held it in hers with her face averted. I tried to catch a glimpse of it, but without avail till she turned and looked at me as seriously as the moon was looking on the ocean.

One morning Lisa and I were walking on the beach. The wind was northerly, and though the sky was cloudless, the air was crisp. Both felt its invigorating influence, and suddenly Lisa started to run. As she did so she caught a handkerchief either from her belt or her bosom. I thought I saw something white flutter away from her and fall on the sand, but supposed it was the sunlight on the handkerchief. She was running very fast, and I had all I could do to catch her. When I did so I had forgotten to ask her if she had dropped anything.

That evening the moon, which had waned, rose late, and I concluded after leaving Lisa to go to the rocks and watch it come up out of the water. It rose with the shimmering disk, making a tangle of lighted wave crests between me and it. I was chilled sitting still and concluded to go down on to the beach and find my missing companion and wished to bring her nearer to me by going over the ground where we had walked during the morning. I was strolling along meditatively when I saw something white on the sand. I picked it up. It was a letter. I have strong eyes and could make out by the dim moonlight the address on the back. It was Nina Nikolovitch. The Russian name naturally attracted my attention. I don't know what it was that induced me mechanically to slip the letter from its envelope. I am not used to reading other people's epistles. Perhaps it was some working of the brain in advance of logical reasoning, perhaps fate. At any rate, I did so and unfolded it. The light was not sufficient to enable me to read the finer writing within, except one word that stared me in the face—my own name.

Striking a match, I read the few lines of the letter. It informed Nina Nikolovitch that during the previous spring I had been seen in Philadelphia.

Then I remembered that I had seen Lisa drop something during the morning when she was running on the beach. It must have been this letter. She had not come upon me by accident. She had been hunting for me. What for? Suddenly a scene came up before me, a scene enacted while I was at the university in Russia. All

ing I was strolling along meditatively when I saw something white on the sand. I picked it up. It was a letter. I have strong eyes and could make out by the dim moonlight the address on the back. It was Nina Nikolovitch. The Russian name naturally attracted my attention. I don't know what it was that induced me mechanically to slip the letter from its envelope. I am not used to reading other people's epistles. Perhaps it was some working of the brain in advance of logical reasoning, perhaps fate. At any rate, I did so and unfolded it. The light was not sufficient to enable me to read the finer writing within, except one word that stared me in the face—my own name.

Striking a match, I read the few lines of the letter. It informed Nina Nikolovitch that during the previous spring I had been seen in Philadelphia.

DAMES AND DAUGHTERS.

Violets have always been the favorite flowers of the ex-Empress Eugenie.

Mme. Patti possesses an old doll called Henriette, which was given her when she was seven years old for singing nicely.

The Duchess of Beaufort is known as the "flying duchess," because she was the first English peeress to make a flight in an aeroplane.

Mrs. Anna M. Jarvis, the originator of "mother's day," is said to be a typical Quakeress of the old-school. Her object in having one day in each year set apart for mothers is because of her gratitude to her own mother.

Miss Lillian Pearl McOmber of Ann Arbor, Mich., is the second woman to graduate from the engineering department of the University of Michigan and the first graduate from that department, either male or female, to take a degree of bachelor of science in architectural engineering.

Fly Catches.

Umpire William Evans of the American league staff says he doesn't object to kicking in mild form if it doesn't go too far.

The casualty statistician of the National league has figured it out that Frank Chance has been hit on the head twenty times by pitched balls.

"Too many pitchers kill the game," says Umpire Sils O'Loughlin. "Make every pitcher stand on his own record and finish when physically able."

Musgraves Donovan, Jennings and Duffy agree that the coaching line should be at least two yards farther away from the base lines. The proposition has been put up to President Ban Johnson.

A pretty woman can turn a man's head, but a good woman can keep it straight.—Huntington Herald.

We can conscientiously say this much in woman's favor: She hasn't begun to wear ostrich plumes on her shoes yet.—Galveston News.

The girl servants have been organized now, and they will soon have a distinct trail to the nearest ice cream parlors.—Rushville Republican.

The latest ultra fashionable gown is one that neither bows nor buttons, but is wound around the neck and covers good man and true will hope that it may be a self-winder.—Chicago Record-Herald.

County Horse Breeders' Associations

By D. O. THOMPSON,

Animal Husbandry Department, Purdue University Experiment Station

A SCORE of years is a short time in the horse improvement business within a state. Marked improvement can be made within that time, however, by concerted action on the part of all farmers. The prospects for a continued period of remunerative horse prices are good. Animals bred to a specific purpose are always in demand. The "misfits" are slow sellers at discounted prices. Water cannot rise higher than its source. The same is true of blood—a three-quarters blood stallion cannot get foals of greater purity of blood than himself. New Jersey owns twelve pure bred stallions, which she loans to county horse breeders' associations. In a small state this method of horse improvement may prove very valuable. A look at the methods of improvement of the horse breeding industry is suggestive TON GELDINGS.—The highest priced flesh the farmer can produce for the market. Community breeding would enable farmers to produce this type of draft geldings in carload lots.

In many ways. Some states have active county breeders' associations; others have and enforce a stringent stallion license law; others subsidize stallions of special merit, and nearly all are making a concerted effort to improve the horses produced within their borders. While in some states a systematic effort at horse improvement is being made, in others there is no state wide movement for advancing the horse breeding industry.

Community Effort.

Community effort will provide one efficient means of bringing about this much desired improvement in the horse. Farmers within a county or several townships banding themselves together in an association for the advancement of the horse breeding industry will find that the association will serve to concentrate attention along certain definite lines and will establish a high standard for the members to work toward. It will keep the members in touch with all that pertains to the horse breeding business, through meetings, distribution of literature, etc., and will promote co-operation among them to protect members from fraud, contagious diseases and enable them to secure the profits which may accrue by selling in carload lots horses uniform in quality, type and soundness due to the establishment of a distinct type of horse within the district in the jurisdiction of the association. The association will strive to ward improvement by encouraging the use of prepotent, sound, individually good, pure bred stallions in preference to impotent, unsound stallions of grade, cross bred and mongrel or scrub breeding. It will also encourage the use for breeding purposes of sound, type, high quality mares of pure or high grade breeding and discourage the use of the undersized, unsound, "misfit" mares.

One hundred brood mares like this in a county would give it a national reputation as a horse breeding center.

Method of Organization.

The following method of organization is suggested for any county or community contemplating organizing their horse interests into a breeders' association.

Let some leading horseman or farmer call a meeting of all interested farmers to consider the proposition and secure some capable speaker familiar with organizations of this kind and with the horse breeding business to present to the meeting the advantages of such organization. Adopt a constitution and bylaws and elect necessary officers. Meet quarterly thereafter and have a recognized authority on horse address each meeting. Assign topics for members to discuss at these meetings. Secure and distribute among members literature on care, management and principles of horse breeding.

Notes About the Horse.

The breeders' association should not be formed under direction of a promoter who wishes to unload a stallion at a fancy price upon a community. Farmers within a community should organize on their own initiative.

The Hamilton County (Ind.) Horse Breeders' association has made marked advance during the period of its existence, and the secretary reports increasing interest.

Data collected in several states show that side bones on the fore feet are by far the most prevalent unsoundness in draft horses. This is thought to be due largely to the great weight of the forequarters.

Wisconsin has many communities where the farmers produce and sell high class grade dairy cattle of uniform breeding and type in carload lots at an advanced price over that received by farmers selling equally good cattle, a few in a lot. This can be done with horses anywhere through community effort.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS.

TIMELY TOPICS OF PLANTS AND PESTS DISCUSSED WEEKLY
 By H. A. Surface, State Zoologist of Pa.

FOR THE BUFFALO CARPET MOTH

The little insect commonly called the Carpet moth or Buffalo beetle is very destructive to carpets, but if watched damage by it can easily be prevented.

A gentleman in the western part of Pennsylvania recently wrote to State Zoologist H. A. Surface, of Harrisburg, asking him had just moved into a house where they had found specimens of a certain insect, which were enclosed with the letter. He asked for information concerning it, and the reply of Professor Surface was as follows:

The specimen of insect sent from your house is the Buffalo moth, or, in other words, it is the larva or a beetle known as the "Carpet beetle." It feeds on various kinds of woolen goods, but especially on the nap of carpets. The best thing to do is to scrub the floors of your rooms with water containing five per cent. creolin. Then spray the edges of the carpets with an alcoholic solution of corrosive sublimate. Spray the carpets under furniture. The pests are generally most destructive. It is also desirable to use rugs instead of carpets, and take these out into the sun and air, and beat them occasionally.

However, if one does not care to go to the trouble of discarding their carpets for the sake of rugs, that can nevertheless easily control such pests. Watch and occasionally remove furniture to one side, and see if the carpets where the furniture rested are being damaged. If it is evident that the piling or woolen fibres are being eaten away, and especially if rows of bare threads are exposed anywhere in the carpet, this is evidence that this pest is at work.

The thing to do is to spread a wet towel over the carpet as it lies on the floor, and iron this with a very hot iron, in order to drive the scalding steam down through the carpets, and thus kill the pests.

THE APPLE SEED CHALCIS.

A comparatively new insect is seriously injuring the apples in some portions of Northern Pennsylvania. It is a very small fly or gnaw which pierces the fruit, and lays its eggs so that its larvae or young develop in the seeds of the apple, and it is hence called the Apple seed chalcis. It results in dwarfed and deformed fruit. Because the insect is not generally observed, and the little maggot itself lives within the seed, few persons know that such fruits are not due to dry weather, starvation, lack of pruning and spraying, and other causes, which might result in dwarfed products.

A correspondent in Bradford, Pa., wrote to State Zoologist Surface, asking how worms get into apple seeds. He stated also that he found a worm in the meaty part of pulp of the apple. The reply of Professor Surface was as follows:

"I am glad to receive your letter making inquiry as to how worms get into apple seeds. This is the Apple seed chalcis. The egg is laid in the seed by a very small fly, with a very long ovipositor or egg guide. This pest is already becoming quite common in the northern part of our State, but, unfortunately, the people are not ready to listen to what we have to say about it. It may be a few years before they will be willing to act in concert and destroy it. It is not difficult to get rid of the Apple seed chalcis and prevent loss by it, if the people will only do so.

The method is to destroy all the little knotty and deformed apples. This really could be done before or after they naturally drop from the tree. The Apple seed chalcis remains in the seed during the winter. Thus if the seeds were destroyed before winter, the pests would likewise be ended.

The chief feature of the work of this pest is that the apples are attacked in size, remain bunched together in clusters, and are often more or less deformed or misshapen. We have worked upon the life history of this insect, and now have it worked out. While I and my inspectors have known of this insect for three or four years in this State, and have known of its possibilities of great destruction, it is rather remarkable that you have been the first inquiry upon this pest. Persons having clusters of small dwarfed apples should examine the seeds in them to see if there is a little grub or larva in them. If so, they may know that it is the Apple seed chalcis, and all such fruit should be destroyed. Also, it is important that the seedling and wormless trees in the neighborhood be destroyed to prevent the breeding of such pests.

It is very probable that the worm or larva in the meat or pulp of the apple you mention, is not the Apple seed chalcis, but the Railroad maggot. This is the larva of a fly and it is best destroyed by picking up and destroying the fallen fruit within less than a week from the time they drop. Therefore, pigs or sheep in the orchard to destroy the fallen fruit, quite promptly would prove very beneficial in helping to prevent such pests.

You are doing right in picking the inferior, injured or defective fruit from the tree as soon as it can be detected. The large worms feeding around the core of the apple and making a hole which is generally at the blossom end, are the Codling moth, and for these the best practical preventive is to spray with an arsenical poison, such as one ounce of arsenate of lead in each gallon of water in the spring just after the petals fall.

Next week will be a large time at Chestnut Hill Park, (White City) when the Farmers' Picnic will be held for five days.

Application will be made to Montgomery County Court to divide the Second ward of Royersford into two election districts.

FAIR AT COLONEL MORRELL'S RACE TRACK.

The Philadelphia Grangers and Farmers will hold their Second Annual Fair at Colonel Morrell's race track, Knight's and Red Lion roads, Torresdale, on Saturday, September 23rd. The fair will begin at 10 o'clock. The forenoon will be given to judging exhibits, and the afternoon to races, contests and amusements. If you have a good horse and your neighbor has one, and you would like to have a special race, notify the Chairman, and he will fix it up and give a suitable prize to the winner. There will be also a pony race, a motorcycle race, foot races, etc. Prizes will be given to the best four horses hitched to a hay wagon; two horses, to market team; and one horse, to a manure cart. Prizes and awards will be given to horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, dogs, poultry, fruit, vegetables, flowers, butter, cakes, bread, preserves, fancy work, and admission fee, and in most cases no charge for entry. Alfred Decker, Chairman; Edward E. Casey, Treasurer; Henry Brown, Secretary.

IMPROVING THE HORSE.

On page 5 of this issue will be found the first of a series of articles by D. O. Thompson, on "Improving the Horse." The first article is entitled, "Country Horse Breeders' Association." Mr. Thompson, who is connected with the Animal Husbandry Department, of Purdue University Experimental Station, is an authority on the subject of horse raising. Just now when the prices for horses are so high and there being little or no hope of their being cheaper we think it will pay farmers to read these three articles the first of which is printed in this issue on page 5.
